STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Historically this building and grounds are of high local significance providing evidence of the success of farming in the early 20th Century associated with improved transport links. Aesthetically it reflects the principles of the Federation Queen Anne style adapted to the form of the rural weatherboard residence. Scientifically it is significant in demonstrating the adaptation of timber construction to a style closely associated with masonry construction. Culturally the building and grounds, including mature vegetation, are of high local significance by virtue of historic association, aesthetic form and relationship to the remaining traditional curtilage. The building is regionally rare being the last known example of its type in the south of the Shire.
